In her latest work photographer Jessica Hilvitz's explores identity and freedom of choice in a consumer culture. Her work combines images of food and the female figure to employ humor and cultural commentary. By juxtaposing these ideas she questions consumption and the effect of that it has on the individual and contemporary society.

Ashley Sands' work is a visual collection of historical and imagined figures that reference the side shows and show stoppers of the turn of the century. Influenced by tragedy, tradition, antiquities, and oddities, her work connects past to present. Ashley combines elements of printmaking, painting, collage, and photography into her representations of the exceptional.
